Salute to the dog bone

Celebrating the cable protector connector that has become the industry standard.

For the last 25 years, Yellow Jacket has led the way in cable protector innovation. Among its many industry leading firsts, Yellow Jacket, Inc. is the original developer of the "dog bone" connector which is used on both Yellow Jacket and Bumble Bee products.

Since its inception in 1986, the dog bone connector has become the standard connector for cable protectors and has even been licensed to other cable protector manufacturers for use on their own.

Cable Protector Myth Buster

Myth #2: Rails ARE NOT required on ADA ramps for cable protectors.

Buzz says this myth is...

TRUE

According to the Americans with Disabilities Act (28 CFR part 36), rails are not required to be placed on ramps that are under 6 inches in height. Instead, ADA guidelines state that two inch vertical edge protection must be provided for any sort of "drop off."

Yellow Jacket, Inc. was the first to patent zero-taper, trip-free ramps. WASP™ ramps from Yellow Jacket provide smooth transitions in every direction (see the blue ramps in the photo to the left). These ramps eliminate the drop off and the need for dangerous edge railings that can create trip hazards while eliminating the trip hazard of exposed connectors. BarrierFree™ ramps increase the avenues for those walking or passing over them in wheelchairs.

When purchasing ADA ramps for cable protectors, be sure to look for the smooth BarrierFree™ transitions that will keep you and others safe.
